

For kids like Emily.

Five-year old Emily has been battling chronic lung disease since birth and was required to wear oxygen until the age of 2.

In March of 2019, symptoms that appeared as a typical cold soon became life-threatening for young Emily.

After doctors were unable to stabilize her condition, they determined that her tiny lungs would not be able to recover. She would need a double-lung transplant to survive. Emily's parents, Stephanie and Justin were told to expect weeks or months before lungs would become available. They also knew that Emily had only days left to fight.

Miraculously, only 36 hours after being placed on the transplant list, Emily received the incredible gift of a new pair of lungs.

In Emily's mother's words: "While we don't know Emily's prognosis, we are grateful for each day with our sassy little girl. We live each day to the fullest and strive to live grateful lives with a focus on honoring Emily's donor through small acts of kindness."
