

For kids like Jacob.

From birth, Jacob Thiboutot's family described him as "an energetic, goofball-of-a-child" who was too busy to even sit on his mother's lap, but at 18 months old, that all changed. Jacob was experiencing a sudden onset of debilitating symptoms and had an enlarged abdomen.

After a series of tests, The Barbara Bush Children's Hospital (BBCH) oncology team discovered that Jacob had a cantaloupe-sized, cancerous tumor in his abdomen and many small tumors along his spine and behind his eye. Cancer had also spread to his bone marrow. Jacob began his first of six rounds of chemotherapy at BBCH the same day he received his stage 4 neuroblastoma diagnosis.

This tiny warrior endured chemotherapy, major abdominal surgery, two bone marrow transplants, and weeks of immunotherapy treatments. He finally completed 18 months of intensive treatment, just in time to celebrate his third birthday.

Today, at eight years old, Jacob remains in remission and is back to his spunky, curious self.

The Barbara Bush Children's Hospital and Maine Children's Cancer Program didn't just save Jacob's life, his parents explain; they left Jacob with fond memories of his "BBCH Family" during his time in treatment: "If you ask him about his time at The Barbara Bush Children's Hospital, he gets so excited because some of his favorite people in the world are there. And it's because they helped him through some of the hardest points in his life."
